What's gambling really costing you?

Gambling is a normal activity for some people. It might be a bit of fun with friends, a weekly lottery ticket, or a day at the races. However, for some people, gambling can become harmful. Gambling can come at a high cost including financially, emotionally and personally leading to a breakdown of family and relationship.

How do I know if gambling is a problem?

If gambling is causing stress or anxiety, it might be a sign that it's a problem. Other signs are:

- Feeling guilty, anxious or depressed about gambling
- Losing control of how much time or money is spent on gambling
- Withdrawing from family and friends
- Trying to win back losses
- Borrowing money or selling valuables to gamble
- Falling behind with bills or signing up new credit cards
- Thinking about gambling every day
- Lying about gambling

You can be gamble aware and gamble more safely.

You can build safeguards into your gambling with tried-and-true strategies such as:

- Get a handle on how you gamble
- Set limits on how much you bet
- Make sure you're informed
- Have a game plan
- Don't get caught up in the moment
- Use social support
- Get balance in your life
- If you need help, ask. Help is close at hand.

*See website for details.

Take a break and ban yourself

A good way to take control is deciding to block, ban or bar yourself (also called self-exclusion) from gambling. Self-exclusion can help if you want to cut down, have a break or quit for good. You choose the locations or websites that you know present risks for you – a venue, the section of a venue where there's gambling (say, the gaming room), or an online betting service – and you say how long you want to opt out. It might be temporary or permanent. It's your call.

How can you have a conversation about gambling?

It takes courage and commitment to support someone struggling with gambling on their journey to change. Although you're an important part of this process, remember it's your friend or loved one who has to take responsibility for their own gambling.

Supporting employees who have gambling issues

Workplaces have a responsibility to take care of health and safety at work. It might seem like common sense that gambling in the workplace is banned but having a clear policy can help reduce the impact.

Supporting a workmate who may have gambling issues

Do you have a colleague who gambles in the workplace? Do you think they may be struggling with gambling? Check out your workplace gambling policy so you understand what your obligations are. Your employer has a duty of care.

Accessing Support

No matter how you're affected by gambling - your own or someone else's - GambleAware can help. It's never too late to get help – you can reach out today. For free, confidential advice and support, and to find services near you, visit gambleaware.nsw.gov.au or call us on 1800 858 858. GambleAware can also arrange for you to speak to a professional GambleAware counsellor who either speaks your language or knows your culture.

Young people's use of gambling-like products

The NSW Youth Gambling Study 2020 explored gambling and simulated gambling by young people aged 12-17 years in NSW. It found that participation in simulated gambling (gambling-like products)² by young people is widespread and that it appears to be increasing. The most popular forms of gambling were informal private betting, scratchies or lotteries, bingo and keno. However, a quarter of the young people who had gambled in the past year had gambled online. The most common way they gambled online was by using a parent's account with their permission.

Parents and carers can have the greatest influence on children's attitudes and behaviours towards gambling. Many parents believe that gambling is harmless fun and don't set any rules about gambling. This normalises the behaviour and can lead to their child experiencing gambling harm in adulthood.

Here some practical tips for parents and carers to protect young people from gambling harm:

- Be a good role model
- Explain how gambling works
- Discuss how gambling advertising works
- Play your child's video games
- Limit the amount of online screen time
- Don't allow your children to use your credit card
- Adjust your online security and ad settings
- Blocking access to gambling websites
- Activate parental controls
